“Learning is improved when students get information in a rich context. The more detail, emotional content, and senses that a teacher uses, the better students remember. One way to do this is to use stories to emphasize important concepts. Stories not only capture students’ attention better than cold, hard facts, but they provide an anchor for students to remember the concept in the future.”

- William J. Hueston, MD